“Scientists reveal the hi” is the recaption meme of the month

It started with a May 2025 BBC thumbnail asking “What makes ginger cats ginger?”. A “hi” edit appeared in May, and this month recaption edits are spreading on Instagram and TikTok. An inverted “bye” edit posted on 12 Oct got 35,000+ likes in three days.

> Why it matters: A swap-the-caption template anyone can join. Brands can play with it using their own product in place of the cat.

Jamie Miller's “Babydoll” takes over TikTok dance feeds

The Welsh singer released Babydoll on 7 Aug. A dance video by @shelbanddyl, posted on 28 Sept, has 7.6M+ views and 671,500 likes in about three weeks. Jennifer Love Hewitt has posted a piano cover.

> Why it matters: A UK artist's song is driving a global dance trend. The easy routine makes it simple to copy.

A sketch of friends in a Belfast pub goes viral

Live illustrator Geraldine Sawyer (@gertiesoybean) drew a group of friends at the Sunflower Public House in Belfast. The video of their reaction got hundreds of thousands of views in a few days. The friends hung the portrait at Bodega Bagels, where they work.

> Why it matters: Wholesome, real-life surprise moments still travel. The reaction is the content.

A real Paris metro video gets accused of being AI

Océane, 20, taped her iPhone to the outside of a packed train at a Paris metro station and posted the clip on Thursday. Many commenters said it was AI. Her reply: “It's so well done that you think it's AI?”

> Why it matters: “Is it AI?” is now the first reaction to anything surprising. Real footage needs proof it's real.

YouTube tests Shorts bonuses, including in the UK

YouTube is testing bonuses for invited Shorts creators in the US, UK, Germany, Brazil, Japan and South Korea. It hasn't published the requirements. Shopping affiliates can also earn bonus commission on videos kept public for 30+ days.

> Why it matters: More reasons for creators to post Shorts, and to keep shoppable videos up longer.

Instagram's chief says more AI labels are coming

Adam Mosseri says Instagram will add more AI labels and is working to stop AI copying creators' work. He also said: “We do not throttle the reach of AI content just for being AI content.”

> Why it matters: Labels are spreading, but AI posts aren't being held back. Being clearly real is becoming a selling point.

Pinterest adds Barbie DreamHouse to Restyle

Restyle now has a Barbie DreamHouse option, one of five styles. Pinterest says searches for “Barbie DreamHouse aesthetic” are up 72%. It's a beta for English-language Pinners in the US and Canada.

> Why it matters: Pinterest is turning aesthetic trends into tools. Not in the UK yet.
