Greggs opens a hotel suite with a sausage roll hotline

Greggs has opened a permanent suite at Newcastle's Hotel Gotham, where guests lift a gold rotary phone to order a sausage roll on a silver platter. It sleeps two and costs from £335 a night, per Famous Campaigns. Greggs is also giving away a stay through its app every three months for two years.

> Why it matters: A brand stunt that only works because of its sense of humour. Strong for photos.

Boxed GTA 6 copies arrive with a code, not a disc

Boxed GTA 6 copies have started arriving, with a download code and a poster inside rather than a disc, per Metro and Push Square. Some pre-orderers got theirs a day early. The pre-load is 212GB on PS5 and the game launches on Thu 19 Nov.

> Why it matters: Unboxing clips are doing the work before launch. Game launches are now a social event.

Meta explains how Facebook's Your Algorithm controls work

Meta's engineering blog says new interests get extra weight for a limited time, and an LLM builds the interest profile. Requests such as less AI-generated content use separate demotion signals rather than topic matching. The tool was announced in October, and Meta lists no countries.

> Why it matters: Meta shows how topic controls shape the feed. Not confirmed for the UK.

X previews labels that explain why its AI flagged a post

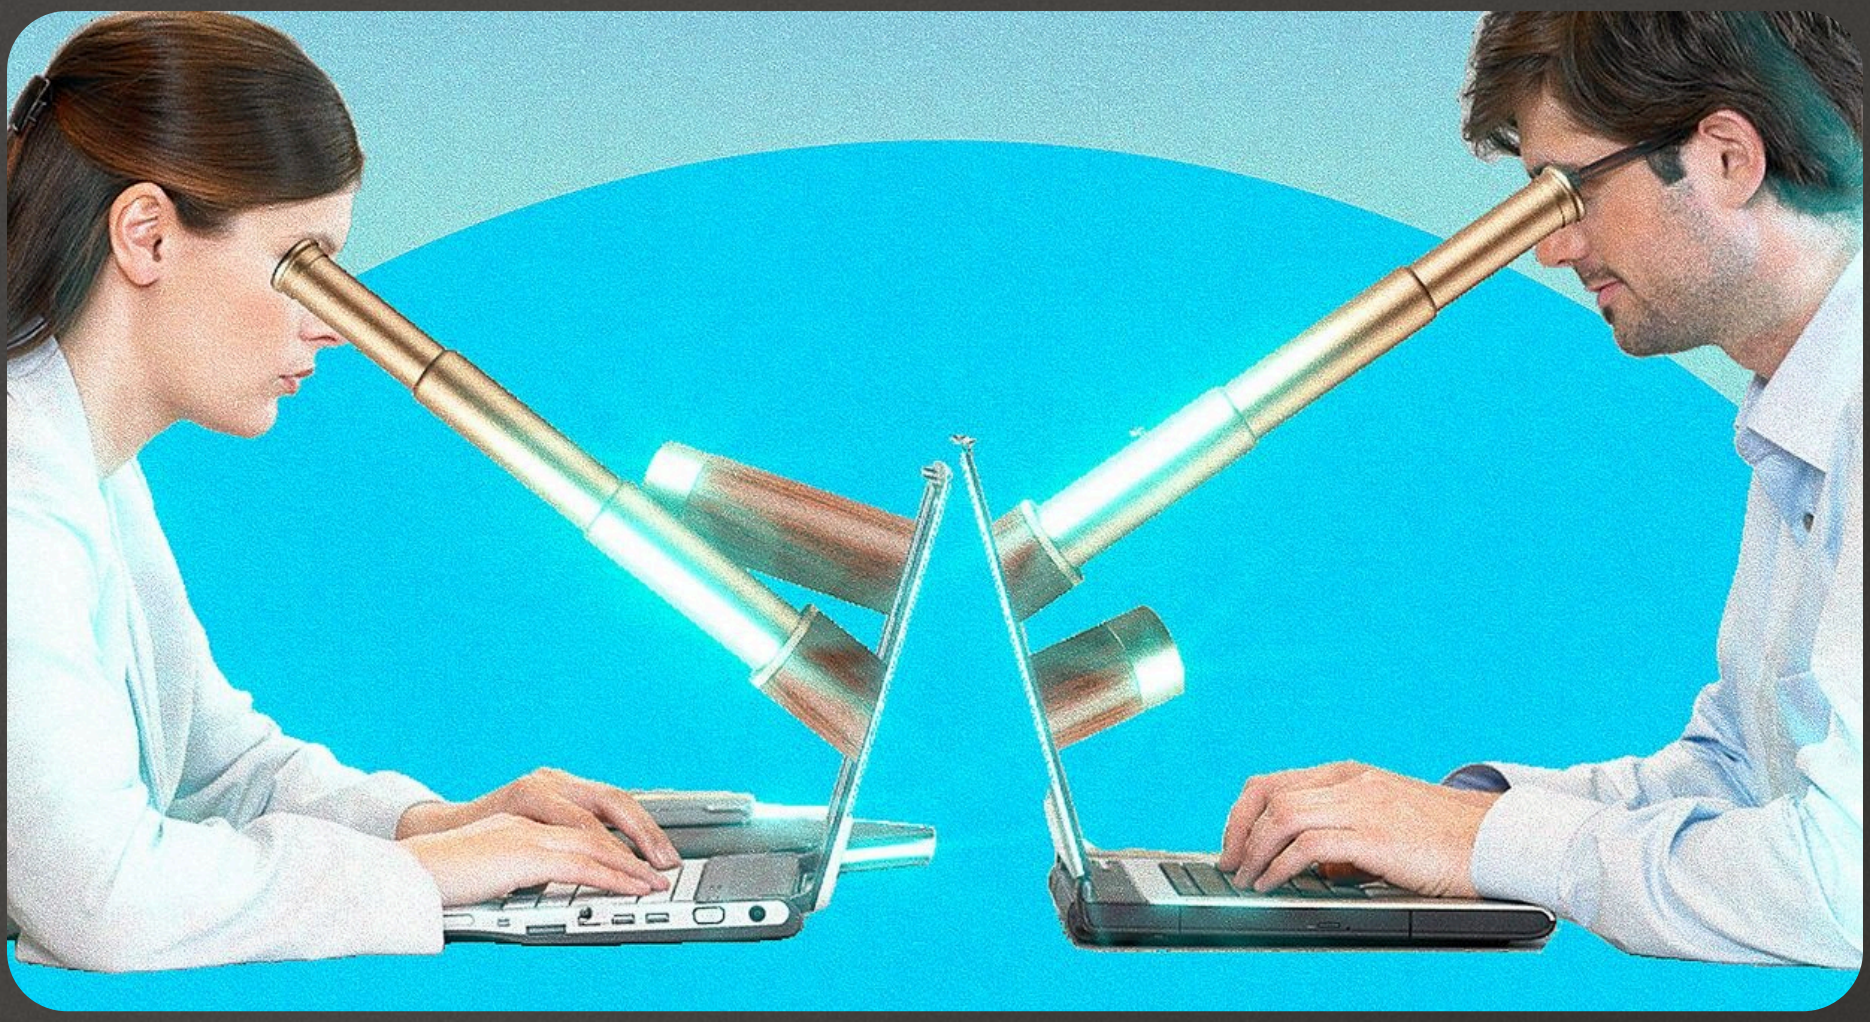

X's head of brand safety previewed designs for labels that would tell users why X's AI flagged a post, how its reach was limited, and let them appeal, Adweek reports. It was shown at the Brand & AI Safety Summit on 10 Nov. It is a design preview, not a confirmed rollout.
