Bradley Walsh's new quiz has viewers guessing

Channel 4 has advertised “The Million Pound Shot”, due Sunday at 9pm, with a trailer only on live TV. Viewers recorded and shared it online. The only detail is a TV guide line: three contestants, £1m and “one huge secret twist”. Channel 4 hasn't released details.

> Why it matters: A mystery drop turns viewers into the marketing. People guess before anything is confirmed.

Netflix's new Pride and Prejudice trailer lands

Netflix released a new Pride and Prejudice trailer on Wednesday, with Emma Corrin as Lizzie, Jack Lowden as Darcy and Olivia Colman as Mrs Bennet, who gets the opening line. The six-part series is reported for 3 Dec.

> Why it matters: Fans pick period dramas apart frame by frame. Even Mr Collins's sideburns are getting attention, per Metro.

The niche Halloween costume meme is back

The annual format is back on X: people caption deep-cut costume ideas, such as Dakota Johnson and limes or Princess Diana's revenge dress. The Tab, citing Know Your Meme, traces it to 2022–2023, and it went massively viral in 2024.

> Why it matters: The more obscure the costume, the better the post. Brands can play with deep cuts from their own world.

Firefox reunites YouTube-era meme legends in an ad

Firefox posted a one-minute ad on 25 Oct with Numa Numa guy, Chuck Testa, Overly Attached Girlfriend, Annoying Orange and Tay Zonday, asking “What happened to the internet?” Dexerto reports 8m+ views.

> Why it matters: Nostalgia sells. Real internet characters beat a mascot when the joke is shared memory.

A Walmart × Disney Muppets Christmas ad kicks off ad season

Walmart's US ad “A Who Knew Carol”, made with Disney and The Muppets Studio, riffs on The Muppet Christmas Carol, with Walton Goggins as Scrooge. It ends by teasing three more ghosts: Christmas Presents, Deals to Come and Christmas Fast. It's a US campaign.

> Why it matters: Christmas ads are starting, and this one borrows a Disney classic. Watch for UK launches.
